Executive Directors

Capability & Service Delivery: Malcolm Cornberg OBE.

Strategy & Prevention: Gerry Liddell.

Operational Delivery: Brad Jones

SOCA tackles serious organised crime affecting the United Kingdom and its citizens and is the custodian of a large range of national and international capabilities. SOCA works to priorities set by the Home Secretary which currently includes Class A drugs, people smuggling and human trafficking, major gun crime, fraud, cyber crime and money laundering. SOCA works to bring serious criminals to justice and uses many other tactics to disrupt crime – to ensure it doesn't pay and to make it harder to commit.

Established in April 2007 as a single national organisation to support effective policing, the NPIA is a non-departmental public body sponsored by the Home Office. It provides national services to support frontline policing such as the Police National Computer (PNC), the National DNA Database and the Police National Database (PND). The NPIA provides professional advice, training and tailored support to the police. It supports police forces and authorities in increasing cost-effectiveness to help protect the frontline at a time of shrinking budgets (Police-owned and led, the NPIA is governed by a tripartite board comprising the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO), the Association of Police Authorities (APA), the Home Office and independent members.

Note: As part of the coalition government's police reform agenda, announced in July 2010, the NPIA will be phased out in the coming years. Many of its functions will be subsumed into other bodies, including a new National Crime Agency and a Police ICT company. At the time of writing, it is expected that the majority of NPIA functions will have been transferred to successor bodies or decommissioned by December 2012.

The Mayor's Office for Policing and Crime (MOPC) replaced the Metropolitan Police Authority (MPA) in January 2012. The MOPC is a functional body of the Greater London Authority. The Mayor automatically becomes the occupant of the MOPC and remains accountable for the effective exercise of its functions. The role of the MOPC is to secure the maintenance of the Metropolitan Police Service and ensure it is efficient and effective, holding the Commissioner to account for the exercise of the functions of the Commissioner and of those people under the Commissioner's direction and control.
